“ I remember Jack as being a man of integrity, someone who Palisades folks always spoke of as being a "good farmer" and someone who supported and showed up for community events with his easy manner and smile. Jack, over the years, had probably been asked to be a pall bearer for deceased Palisades residents more than anyone else in the community - something that by itself speaks of the respect the community had for him. Before the orchards sprang up in the lower part of the coulee, the Linville place was always the first ranch that appeared on a drive up the coulee road, and I always enjoyed seeing the various stages of farming taking place on the vast fields - fields being watered, hay in beautiful windrows or bales waiting to be picked up.

Jack was appreciated and loved. He will be missed.
