“ I cannot believe she is gone. It seems like just the other day we were a couple of twenty somethings headed to chihuahua canyon for a camping trip. It was just the two of us she was 20 and I 22. She was the most beautiful and caring girl I had ever met, her eyes shining with excitement of taking time off to go deep in the woods for a weekend. We got to her chosen camp spot, I was going to say our chosen spot but she was the one making all of the decisions that weekend. We hiked several miles up the canyon until we came upon her perfect spot. I was really glad as I was in great shape but not much of a hiker. We set up camp and made a fire and relaxed with her favorite wine. I was not much of a drinker but I would not let the moment pass without sharing a glass of white wine with her, really she could of got me to drink anything I really loved Kristine with all of my heart. I did get her to shoot my shotgun that night before we had drinks and it was so funny how the recoil scared her so bad it too me an hour to settle her down. The rest of the weekend we went on many hikes and she would point out the vegetation and what it was called as I listened intently, not because I was interested in flowers but it was her telling me about them. She is still the most beautiful person I have ever met and even though I did not see her for many years I knew that she graduated from western about the same time I graduated from central. I loved that she got to work in a career she loved. I never stopped loving her but our paths were not meant to last forever and we went our own ways. I feel that the world is a bit more hollow without her. goodbye Kristine, love Bill
