“ Tom was my neighbor when I was growing up in Mansfield. One snowy winter day when I was in third grade, we were sledding on a hill not far from our houses. The city had put sawhorses at the bottom and top of the hill to keep cars from driving where we were sledding. Tom and I decided to sled under the sawhorse, As we slid down the hill, I was on top and decided to look up to see how close we were. Big mistake, I hit the sawhorse with my head, my sister wanted me to sit on the sled and she would pull me home. Nothing doing, I went running home with blood running down my face and ended up with eight stitches to close the gap in my head. Tom and I never mentioned that stupid decision, we probably would have made it if I had only kept my head down.
